Lidia Santarelli

Lidia Santarelli, Ph.D. (European University Institute, Florence, Italy) is a historian of modern Europe and the Mediterranean. She specializes in the study of fascism, war and society, and transitional justice.

Her research work focuses on the experience of Fascist Italy's occupation of Greece during World War II, and explores the broader relationships between Italy and Greece, on social, political, and cultural levels. As a scholar, Dr. Santarelli also engages with contemporary questions of collective memory. She has published extensively in American and European scholarly journals.

She is the recipient of several post-doctoral research fellowships at Princeton University, Columbia University, the Center for Advanced Holocaust Studies, Washington D.C., and Harvard University. She has taught at New York University (NYU) and Brown University.

Currently, she is Faculty Librarian for History at NYU and an adjunct faculty member in the History Department and Modern Greek Studies Program at Rutgers University.
